

Frequently Asked Questions

When should I book my newborn session?

The best time to photograph a newborn is between three and 14 days old. At this age the baby is generally feeding well, sleeping a lot and is still willing to be curled up into sweet sleeping poses. Because of this, I recommend that you contact me before the baby is born so that I can pencil in your due date and keep availability in my calendar surrounding the date.

How long does the session last?

A newborn session can take anywhere from 2-4 hours depending on baby's needs. Part of the session time is used to get baby into a deep sleep. Please expect to feed your newborn more than usual in order to get them full and sleepy. I typically start with diaper-on "wrapped" shots and then move on to the sweet nudie bum photos when baby is fast asleep.

What does the session fee include?

The session fee includes the 2-4 hour in studio session with full use of props and accessories, custom retouching and photo enhancements, and a password protected gallery of images for viewing, downloading, and ordering. The full session includes 25 digital files with print release. Additional digital files along with a full range of print products, canvases and albums are available for you to order if you wish.
